BIDDER QUESTIONNAIRE

1. List your experience in dealing with leaf hoppers in citrus and grapes.

2. Describe your experience in dealing with quarantine pests and their treatment.

3. Describe your experience in coordinating pesticide treatments with multiple growers in the same area to maximize the effectiveness.

SCOPE OF WORK

Background Information

The Glassy-winged sharpshooter (Homalodisca vitripennis) has become established in some areas of California as a significant pest in grapes. Since GWSS is a known vector of Xylella fastidiosa, a bacterium that causes Pierce's disease in grapes, the potential to greatly impact grape growing areas with PD is significant. The potential for a significant economic impact on the grape industry by this host plant-vector-disease relationship has been documented in Temecula and Kern County, California. The same threat exists in the agricultural area of Fresno County, where GWSS populations from commercial citrus orchards threaten to vector PD into grapes.

Trapping surveys in Fresno County indicate that GWSS populations are distributed over several different host plants including perennial agronomic crops, ornamental plantings, and weedy plant species. Data from these surveys suggest the GWSS populations are utilizing citrus as its primary reproductive host, and that it may be the predominant overwintering host while grapes, stone fruit, ornamental hosts and weedy species are dormant. Area-wide projects in Kern, Riverside, Tulare and Fresno Counties, have demonstrated a strategy for significantly reducing the GWSS in its over wintering host is feasible during the fall/winter and spring months, prior to the GWSS adult migration into surrounding hosts.

The addition of a major pest like GWSS into Fresno's production system compounds attempts by individual growers to manage the insect on an individual farm basis. Therefore it is essential that a management strategy be implemented that will bridge the challenges to individual growers and consider the entire growing area in a management plan.

Monitoring for GWSS by trapping will occur in the program area. All zones outside of the Fresno quarantine area will have traps set up on a one-quarter mile grid. All traps will be serviced on a regular interval with the numbers of GWSS recorded and any new detection reported to program staff.

Trapping is done by Fresno County Agricultural Commissioner's Office staff. It is not a function of the Treatment Coordinator. However, the Treatment Coordinator uses this data to make treatment recommendations. The Treatment Coordinator should have a system for collecting and analyzing the data in near real-time to make recommendations to decision makers (Fresno County, growers, USDA APHIS) for managing the program.

In order to accomplish the timely application of treatments over large geographical areas in a coordinated manner, a Treatment Coordinator will provide growers with needed treatment information, as well as provide information back to Program Managers so that program treatments are as effective as possible. Recognizing that treatments are voluntarily done by citrus growers, it is imperative to have a coordinator in place that has good communication skills and a strong background in pest management to understand individual grower issues while getting the most effective treatments in place in a timely manner. This Treatment Coordinator position is essential to the management strategy that is implemented so as to help bridge the challenges individual growers have and how that impacts the overall treatment area and treatment effectiveness.

A Treatment Coordinator will maintain contact with program personnel (CDFA and Fresno County) and be responsible for making contact with growers/manager/PCAs who have been identified to treat in accordance with program guidelines. Program officials and the Treatment Coordinator will assess trapping results to determine treatment needs in an attempt to suppress the pest population based on the insect's biology and past years' experience.

GWSS is primarily a pest of economic importance to grapes. Grapes are the number two agricultural plant commodity grown in Fresno County with an annual gross value exceeding of $905 million (2014 Fresno County crop report). The permanent establishment of GWSS/PD in Fresno County would result in significant production and export issues for grapes.

Fresno County Agricultural Commissioner's Office Responsibilities:

The Treatment Coordinator will be under the general program direction of the Fresno County Agricultural Commissioner's Office and California Department of Agriculture (CDFA). Supervision of the Treatment

Coordinator will be by the Fresno County Agricultural Commissioner, and the Coordinator will be subject to Fresno County's rules and regulation.

Treatment Coordinator Responsibilities:
